The system uses an oxy-fuel torch to cut mild steel bar grating. By slowly feeding a carbon steel solid welding wire into the preheat flame, the torch creates a molten spray that instantly preheats the bars as the cutting oxygen stream approaches. An automatic rotation system turns the lower unit so that the molten spray is always leading the cutting oxygen.

Selected projects focus on increasing energy efficiency at both the technology level and facility level, helping to reduce system losses and optimize a facility"s energy use. Projects include advanced membrane solutions to reduce the energy use of separations processes and the development of more efficient high-temperature heat exchangers.
